pine cone hill

the goods After starting her textile house, Pine Cone Hill, in 1994 with just a sewing machine, Annie Selke now shuttles between home base in Massachusetts and a satellite office in Delhi. Her company offers a wide selection of old-meets-new linens, sleepwear and curtains—all with a twist of Americana. the inspiration Selke's preppy-ish prints are informed by Bollywood films, ceremonially painted elephants and the vibrant hues of crowded markets. "India is a constant, happy assault on the senses," she says. "I want it all!" TO SEE HER COLLECTION, GO TO PINECONEHILL.COM.

the maharaja tent company

the goods Mark Rice founded the Maharaja Tent Company in 2002, taking cues from the hand-printed fabrics favored by royals. His extravagant creations include a dozen elaborate tent styles, antique and custom dhurries (any size and in eight color schemes) and, for fun, organdy turbans. the inspiration Rice worked with fashion designer John Galiano for five years before a trip to Rajasthan made him change direction. "It was so opulent," he recalls. "There were tents erected for palaces and gardens—even for traveling." TO SEE HIS COLLECTION, GO TO MAHARAJATENT.COM.
